Protect your reputation

Bed bugs are a major risk to all hotels nowadays (even 5*) with an increase in international travel especially in cosmopolitan London.

Although the majority of people believe that having bed bugs is indicative of poor hygiene, this is not true. An incidence of bed bugs is down to bad luck.

Bed bugs are also believed to be spread via buses, tubes and the train network, more than likely to be used by your guests while they explore London.

Although bed bugs are not known to spread diseases they are very unpleasant for your guests. Negative reviews on websites can quite quickly affect your bookings.

Bed bug infestations increase at a fairly slow rate in comparison to other pests. Quite often you will have had a problem for some time before it is reported to you.

Because it is almost impossible to prevent bed bug infestations we can train your staff to spot the early signs of infestation. We can also review your housekeeping procedures and offer advice on how to minimise the spread of bed bugs.

Leisure centers and hotels

If you are running a busy leisure center or hotel with a full range of services including a swimming pool, you will already know that cockroaches love heated pipes and are great climbers.

Keeping cockroaches infestations at bay is challenging. Using insecticides without locating the source of the problem and improving hygiene will have a limited effect.

Reoccurring treatments can cause resistance in the population which will make further problems increasingly difficult to treat.

We understand that your facilities need to remain open from early morning to late at night so we are able to work out of your hours. Quite often fogging treatments are carried out in the middle of the night so your facilities are safe to use the following morning.

Other pests

As well as cockroaches, mice and rats are common pests in the leisure sector, attracted by food, warmth and long opening hours.

Mice produce around eighty droppings in a day and urinate wherever they run so they can soon contaminate a large area. Like rats they have teeth that continually grow. The constant gnawing to wear these down in size results in fire risk and a lot of damage.

Rats and mice are known to spread diseases and cause food poisoning and therefore Environmental Health Officers are very strict and may apply for a closure order if they discover a bad infestation. This is particularly important for canteens within leisure centres.

Mice tend to come out when it is quiet resulting in them being more active at night. They live for around 12 months, are pregnant for only 3 weeks and a single pair can be responsible for producing hundreds of mice within one year.

If you believe you have a problem contact us for expert advice and a no obligation survey. Signs only become obvious once an infestation has taken hold.
